

My name is Jesse Wollin and I am a front end designer and developer

My story started in a small rural town in southwestern Minnesota grasping a pencil in one hand. Soon after high school, I attended the Atelier: Studio Program of Fine Art, where I learned many concepts I utilize throughout my work today in design and development.

Into the Future

In recent years, I've gone from pursuing an education at the Atelier: Studio Program of Fine Art, toward web design and development at Minneapolis Community and Technical College. Along the way I've won different awards for excellence in laying out the college newspaper, one or two art competitions and compliments from Governor Scott Walker on a commissioned project for a wildlife park in Wisconsin.

I still continue to hold onto and carry on much of what I learned at the Atelier here at MCTC. However, I also continually strive to keep learning more in the ever evolving world of design and technology, while looking forward to a promising career with front end development and design here in Minneapolis, MN.
